Players Put Demands Up Change Asked for in "Unconditional Release" Rule May Cause Mix-Up Among Players and Club-Owners.

Nearly five hundred ball players signed the petition that contains the sevence demands that the Baseball Players Fraternity made yesterday on the National Commission and National Board. The petition deals with several phases of contracts.

Not only the major leasues but the minor leagues are censured for their stand on the unconditional release rules now in force. The petition says that the condition found in the minor leagues given more unfair than in the majors, declaring that the minor league player receives no preliminary notice of his release and that sometimes this is not only the major league player freedives no preliminary notice of his release and that sometimes this is not on preliminary notice of his release and that sometimes this is not on preliminary notice of his release not preliminary notice of his release and that sometimes this is not on preliminary notice of his release not have not prevent the prevent of the prevent his runconditional release and that he knows he will be without as a sective his unconditional release and that he knows he will be without as a prevent his runconditional release and that he knows h
